Our Town

March 14 2013 Originally published March 13, 2008

The truth is, the Soupster was already in a terrible mood when he stopped at the store on his way home. And when he walked from his car to the front door of the grocery store, the Soupster made the mistake of looking up at the big roadside message board. He froze, muttered to himself and jumped to conclusions.

"Don't," the sign read and the Soupster, absurdly, took the message personally.

"Don't what?" he growled. "Just spewing negativity with complete abandon? Typical. That's the trouble with the world. Everywhere it's 'don't!'"

The Soupster took hold of the door handle, but then let go of it, took a step back and turned to face the sign. Like a person with one of those cell-phone earpieces, he spoke to the air.

"Look at that," he said his voice loud enough for passersby to hear and pointing to the empty ladder up to the road sign. "Nobody is even there! They just put 'don't' in your face and then they walk away – probably on one of their frequent breaks. 'Don't' what? I'd like to know."

The Soupster stopped spouting long enough to see a woman carrying a grocery bag give him a pitying stare and a wide berth.

Inside the store, he tried to ignore the "0 trans fat" and "Gluten free" signs. The "fortified with Omega-3" and "Acidophilous added" did not make him feel any more positive. A funk is a funk is a funk.

The Soupster tried to raise his spirits by remembering a pretty little city park he had once come across during travels in the Lower 48. A sign at the entrance had said: "Picnic, fly a kite, rollerblade, sunbathe, jog, dance" and so on. All the things you were supposed to do, instead of the "No dogs!" and "Keep Out!"

And his mood did lighten, buoyed as well by the checker's friendly interest in what he was buying. But when the Soupster walked out the door, he saw the road sign had changed. "Don't Go Home," it now said.

The Soupster got back into his car, stunned. "Don't Go Home?" He was going home. Until now, he had been perturbed. But on the road back to his house, the Soupster felt angry.

"What kind of sick joke is that store playing on people?" "Is it even possible the sign was meant specifically for me?" "Why shouldn't I go home?" The Soupster's mind raced. Two doors from his house, the Soupster pulled over to the side of the road.

"Even if the sign has nothing to do with me, it is irresponsible to make people wonder if something is wrong at their home," the Soupster stewed.

"That's mean," he decided and turned his car around in the direction of the store. The Soupster wasn't sure who he was going to talk to or what he was going to say to them, but he was going to say something to somebody to straighten the responsible parties right out!

But as he neared the store, he realized at once that he would do none of that. For the sign had changed again.

Now it read: "Don't Go Home Until You Try One of Our New Mango Shakes!"

The University of Alaska Southeast Sitka Campus has rescheduled the orientation session for its PE 200 ocean diving class. The orientation now will be from 5:30-8:30 p.m. on Thursday, March 19, at the UAS Sitka Campus. The actual classes take place at various times and locations in Sitka from April 2 through May 4. This two-credit class allows students to earn a PADI (Professional Association of Diving Instructors) Open Water Diver certification. The certification teaches student divers the fundamental knowledge and skills they need to go ocean diving with a buddy,
