Our Town March 12, 2015 A dreaming Soupster is egg-faced

Originally published March 22, 2007

"Two hundred and forty-seven eggs, wreck 'em," the waitress called to the short-order cook in the Soupster's dream about Spring.

In his dream about Spring, the Soupster sat at a breakfast counter that hadn't existed in Our Town for years. Two large dark-haired men sat on either side of him. Both wore Tlingit regalia and each man eagerly tore into herring eggs, mounded into a large pile on a plate before him.

"Pass the soy sauce?" asked the man on the left and the Soupster, still dreaming, did.

"Eggs for you, Soupster?" asked the waitress, her hand on her hip.

"Uh, two, over easy,"

"Two eggs?" said the waitress, her eyebrows arching with disbelief. "Just two?"

The waitress looked over at the men, who, like her, tried to keep from laughing. "You want seal oil with your two eggs?" she said, collapsing in hysterics.

Next, the Soupster dreamed he walked through a park of totem poles and old-growth trees. The Soupster peered into the forest, where he could see figures moving. They were bunnies and chicks -- more specifically, children dressed as bunnies and chicks -- a score of them, bent over and peering under salmonberry bushes and behind spruce and hemlock trunks.

"I've found one!" a cute blue rabbit called out, pulling out from under a skunk cabbage a small hemlock bough covered with herring eggs died in different colors.

"Me, too," called another youngster, this one dressed as a duckling, holding aloft a similar prize. Cries of success came from hither and yon.

At that moment, the two men from the restaurant reappeared and grabbed the Soupster by the arms. The Soupster's body stiffened and the men held him parallel to the ground, as they would a plank of wood. They continued down the forest path, the Soupster strangely calm for someone who was being kidnapped. The men carried the Soupster down to the beach and placed him in a small, open boat. Then they rowed for a time.

Despite the unexpected recent turns of the Soupster's life - or should he say "dream life" - he felt a calm from believing that all this strangeness was a good sign. A sign of something good. Something like Spring?

The Soupster could hear the men placing the oars back in the boat. They grabbed the Soupster, hoisted him up, tipped him over and plunged his head into the cold water. They held him there. In his dream, the Soupster had no sense of the amount of time he hung upside down in the water. Then someone jostled him. Four arms brought the Soupster up sputtering. His hair was filled with herring eggs, which poured, as well, down over his shoulders.

"Sorry, Soupster," said the first of the two men from the boat and restaurant. "We thought you were a hemlock bough."

"A real 'egg head'" said the second man. "That's the Soupster!"

Living Local. That's the philosophy that drives Trish and Dirk White's business ventures: two pharmacies, a photo print shop and gift store — all in Sitka. So it's no surprise that they are First Bank customers and have been for 30 years — with both business and personal accounts with us. "When we go to First Bank for a loan, we know the decision is made right here. Plus, the money stays here to help the people and small businesses of Southeast Alaska," said Dirk. COWS

YOU'LL GET A LICKIN'!

THAT'S ONE BIG COW!

HERD OF COWS

Cows are "herbivores" and eat only vegetation, like grass • Cows are intelligent • They say "Moo" to communicate • An adult cow drinks 35 gallons of water and eats 50 lbs. of food every day • Cows can live up to 25 years • A dairy cow can produce 6 gallons of milk per day • It takes 350 squirts to make a gallon of milk • Cows can go up stairs, but not down • In deep mud, cows can run faster than horses!
