Our Town August 9, 2018

Originally published June 4, 2009

Guy had worked the order counter at the lumberyard for the past 20 years, after spending an equal amount of time working out in the field. Examples of his handiwork stood all over Our Town. And stand they did – even after decades of salt-encrusted gales, Guy's decks, fences, sheds and garages stood strong while much newer structures succumbed to rot. Guy knew how to make things shed water and not trap it. And that, as the poet said, makes all the difference.

"Hey guy!" Guy said to the new builder who had come into the store just about every other day for the better part of the last three weeks. Guy greeted everybody with "Hey guy!" — which was his personal joke.

The newcomer chuckled obediently. "Hey, Guy," he answered. The new contractor had won a federal contract to refurbish some government structures and planned to be in Our Town for a month. With him hailing from sunnier climes, the rain had put a serious damper on his spirit. He was homesick.

"What'll it be?" asked Guy, already feeling sorry for the newbie. He didn't know Our Town's unspoken rule that you had to be here at least 6 months or through a winter before people started taking you seriously.

As the new contractor reeled off his needs, Guy nodded, but didn't write anything down. He didn't have to. Guy had a prodigious memory – big enough to store and retrieve detailed knowledge of just about every building that went up. He remembered who did the work, who paid for the work and how the work went. He remembered what materials they'd used. He automatically remembered all of what his customer had just asked for.

Then Larry the shipwright, showed up to order ironwood and hydraulic hoses and fittings. As the new contractor waited for his order, Guy rang up Larry's stuff. Larry's wife, Felicity, lounged in a nearby chair.

After high school, Guy and Larry had fixed up a classic troller and hand-trolled together for two summers. Then they had that close call. Larry was the seadog and went right back out. Guy started making a living fishing for nails. The two friends grew apart. Well, not so far apart that Guy didn't introduce Larry to Felicity, who was Guy's cousin through his mother.

Enter the Soupster, who chatted with Larry and Felicity and went through the whole "Hey guy!" routine with Guy. Shirley, Guy's wife, had taught beginning piano to the Soupster's niece, who now worked as a concert accompanist. Felicity had recommended the music school at her old college to the Soupster's niece — where the girl received a nice scholarship — even though Felicity had gone there for nursing. Guy had built the Soupster a shed that was still watertight after 33 wet winters. Larry sold him fish.

Guy's two-way radio buzzed, signaling that the new contractor's order was ready.

"Friendly place," the visiting builder said. "I know how it goes from my hometown. The guy at the lumberyard there knows everybody, too." Then, he paused and indicated the Soupster, Larry and Felicity, who were still chatting. "That's got to be unusual, though. The fact that the customers know each other so well. That's got to be rare."

Guy considered his loquacious friends. Actually, the scene he surveyed happened nearly every day at the order counter at the lumberyard. Then, Guy remembered Our Town's "Six Month Rule."

"Yeah, you're right," he fibbed. "Rare, indeed."

Chamber Luncheon Wed. Aug. 15 Leading the Way in Alaska – T21 To Speak

At Chamber Luncheon August 15, 2018 11:30 AM - 1:00 PM AKDT. Speakers include CBS community relations coordinator Maegan Bosak, Joe Darnell from the State of Alaska, Doug Osborne from the Sitka Community Hospital and Amanda Roberts from SEARHC's Tobacco Prevention and Control department. In the US over 300 cities and counties have adopted 21 as the minimum legal sale age (MLSA) to purchase tobacco. On August 22nd Sitka will become the first community in Alaska to adopt a MLSA of 21. The presentation, followed by questions and answers, will cover the process, the new local ordinance, how Sitka's move has inspired other communities around the State, and resources for quitting tobacco. There are many,
many breeds
of dogs.
They range from very large to quite small,
unlike domestic cats!

A dog is as smart
as a 2-year-old.

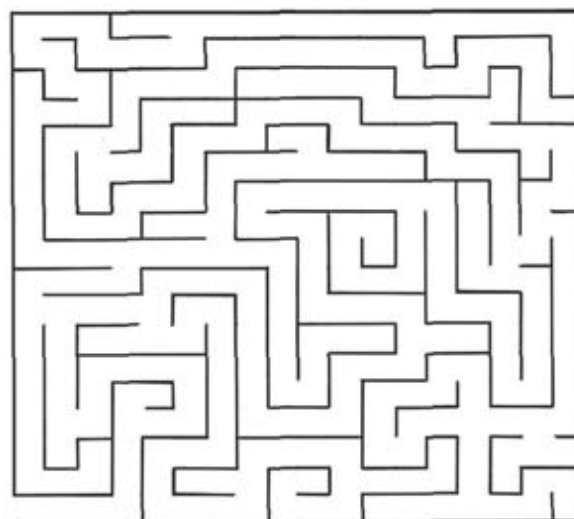

Dogs have a sense
of time & miss you
when you're gone!

Dogs have ten more
adult teeth than humans — 42 vs. 32.

Dogs can hear 4 times as far as humans can.

The part of your dog's brain that controls smell
is 40 times
larger than yours!
