Our Town October 4, 2018

"How ya doin'?" said Max-the-Dog to his human friend Irish Lil, as they stood chatting by the post office.

"Well, Max," said Lil, "I'm getting back to Our Town after being in 'America' for eight weeks. Seven weeks in Michigan and one in California. Both were 100 degrees in the shade, with a daunting amount of mugginess. I tell you, when I walked off that plane into the grand, fine mist of Our Town I even considered kissing the damp ground. But, even with all that joy, when I heard about the writer dying it made me want to cry. That'll teach me to go roamin'!"

"I hardly knew him, Max. I only met him twice in person. How could it have hit me so hard? The writer was kind. He was witty and nice. You know, I'm a bit of a writer, too," said Lil.

"That so, Lil?"

"The writer laughed at my writing and even published some of it. That really tickled me."

"I know what you mean," said Max. "I liked him, too. And my wife, Kitty, really liked his writing. One time, he wrote a story about the two of us, when we met the Soupster – I was sitting in my truck, waiting for Kitty to come out of the sandwich shop."

"Well," said Lil, "I remember the first time I met both the writer and the Soupster. It was in the grocery store parking lot. There I was, in the front seat of a kindly Our Townsperson who'd agreed to give me, carless newbie, a ride. While I was waiting, I pulled a Soup from between the seats and read 'Our Town.' First, he made me smile, then chuckle and, finally, laugh right out loud. And I thought, 'Yep, this town is going to be just fine for me, with people like you in it.'

The Soupster Lives!

Max replied, "You know, the writer had respect for everyone – he met them right where they were. He saw no problem with me and my wife, even though we are different breeds. Dogs, cats. Even telemarketers. And his sense of humor – quirky, for sure, but with lots of underlying truth. My wife Kitty loved the one about, 'Cats have staff.' That's true - I'm her staff. She also loves the mystical stuff, like the time he talked about the 'Wise Old Man' – cats do like the mystical.

"What about the Soupster, Max? Did he pass away, too?"

"The Soupster? Oh, no! Soupster's still around. Why, I saw him the other day, talking to Sam Grace out in front of our-doctor-the-vet's office. That's what I mean – the writer understood everyone. Soupster is a cat man through-and-through, and Sam – well, he's definitely a dog man. And there they were, jabberin' away like old friends."

Lil agreed. "The writer gave me perspective, made me see Our Town in a new light and raised my spirits, too. I still imagine him slipping around corners, taking mental notes of humorous human habits, just to entertain, and maybe now, I guess, cause the occasional angel to raise the occasional eyebrow."

ALASKA DAY

October 18

The Alaska Day Festival recognizes the anniversary of the day in 1867 when Russia ceded control of Alaska to the United States. Alaska Day inspires in us a deeper exploration into the cultures & history of 1800's Sitka. "Museums Preserving History" is the theme this year, recognizing the important roles of museums and other care takers of the stories & artifacts & many cultural traditions in Sitka's heritage.

At the time of Cession, William Seward was President's Lincoln's Secretary of State & pushed strongly for the acquisition of Alaska. Help Seward find his way through the maze.
