Our Town 3/14/19

Originally published March 22, 2007

There's definitely something on the Soupster's mind

"Two hundred and forty-seven eggs, wreck 'em," the waitress called to the short-order cook in the Soupster's dream about Spring.

In his dream about Spring, the Soupster sat at a breakfast counter that hadn't existed in Our Town for years. Two large dark-haired men sat on either side of him. Both men wore Tlingit regalia and eagerly tore into herring eggs, mounded into a large pile on a plate before each.

"Pass the soy sauce?" asked the man on the left and the Soupster, still dreaming, did.

"Eggs for you, Soupster?" asked the waitress, her hand on her hip.

"Uh, two, over easy,"

"Two eggs?" said the waitress, her eyebrows arching with disbelief. "Just two?"

The waitress looked over at the men, who, like her, tried to keep from laughing. "You want seal oil with your two eggs?" she said, collapsing in hysterics.

Next, the Soupster dreamed he walked through a park of totem poles and old-growth trees. The Soupster peered into the forest, where he could see figures moving. They were bunnies and chicks -- more specifically, children dressed as bunnies and chicks -- a score of them, bent over and peering under salmonberry bushes and behind spruce and hemlock trunks.

"I've found one!" a cute blue rabbit called out, pulling out from under a skunk cabbage a small hemlock bough covered with herring eggs dyed in different colors.

"Me, too," called another youngster, this one dressed as a duckling, holding aloft a similar prize. Cries of success came from hither and yon.

At that moment, the two men from the restaurant reappeared and grabbed the Soupster by the arms. The Soupster's body stiffened and the men held him parallel to the ground, as they would a plank of wood. They continued down the forest path, the Soupster strangely calm for someone who was being kidnapped. The men carried the Soupster down to the beach and placed him in a small, open boat. Then they rowed for a time.

Despite the unexpected recent turns of the Soupster's life - or should he say "dream life" - he felt a calm from believing that all this strangeness was a good sign. A sign of something good. Something like Spring?

The Soupster could hear the men placing the oars back in the boat. They grabbed the Soupster, hoisted him up, tipped him over and plunged his head into the cold water. They held him there. In his dream, the Soupster had no sense of the amount of time he hung upside down in the water. Then someone jostled him. Four arms brought the Soupster up sputtering. His hair was filled with herring eggs, which poured, as well, down over his shoulders.

"Sorry, Soupster," said the first of the two men from the boat and restaurant. "We thought you were a hemlock bough."

"A real 'egg head'" said the second man. "That's the Soupster!"

~ Ed. Suzanne's note: I apologize for repeating this Our Town again, but it is still one of my all-time favorites.

Sitka Cycling Adopts Bicycle Benefits Program

- On March 1, Sitka became the first community in Alaska to embrace the "Bicycle Benefits Program" according to Charles Bingham and the Sitka Cycling Club. Residents of Sitka can now participate in the commuter discount program, to offer deals to those who choose bicycle transportation. Bicycle Benefits is a nationwide program (which began in Saratoga Springs, New York) that supports local communities interested in growing bicycle use. This year-round program promotes cycling and boosts local business by offering discounts and rewards to cyclists who bike to and display their sporty Bicycle Benefit helmet sticker at participating establishments. The program sticker can be purchased at local participating businesses for $5. The Sitka Cycling Club will hold a kick-off ride on Saturday, March 23 - for more information about the ride, the Bicycle

a fundraiser for the Sitka Kitch. Dr. Mathur works at SEARHC in Sitka as an ENT specialist. Dr. Mathur grew up in India and did not leave home until age 25. She says: "Coming to the United States caused my food world to expand and grow at an explosive pace; however after living here for 20 plus years and having kids, my go-to food is Indian. I am now more aware of all the health benefits of the different Indian spices that are used and my background as a physician and a mother makes me strive to find healthy, flavorful meals that are not very labor intensive. I grew up on lentils and rice but chicken curry or goat curry was always a treat in my house." The class menu will include chicken curry — a staple of many Indian households and a versatile dish that can be tweaked to make many other kinds of — recipes, a dip, and a side dish. Registration deadline for the Indian cooking class is 11:30 p.m. on Tuesday, March 19. Go to <http://sitkakitch.events.mart.com> (click on class title). For those wanting to pre-pay with cash or check, please call Claire Sanchez or Clarice Johnson at Sitka Conservation Society

(747-7509) to arrange a payment. For more information about the class, contact Jasmine Shaw at 747-9440. The Trust mission is to protect and support local fishing businesses, promote sustainable fishing practices, and revitalize fishing communities in Alaska - see <http://www.thealaskatruck.org/> LFF aims to incentivize ocean conservation practices and strengthen fishery leadership through loan products that will support Alaska residents in purchasing quota and retaining fishery access opportunities. LFF extends loans with competitive interest rates to new entrants and community-based vessel owners seeking to finance quota share purchases. Borrowers must be willing to participate in fishery conservation programs as part of the loan

Spring is the first of earth's four seasons.
Spring often signifies rebirth or rejuvenation.

Spring begins with spring equinox.

In the Northern Hemisphere, astronomers & scientists use the March equinox as the start of spring, which ends on the June solstice, when astronomical summer begins.

When it's Spring
in the

it is Fall in the
