The Soupster chats with an heir to Jane Goodall

Originally published May 24, 2001

The Soupster stretched out his legs in the mold-ed airport seat, prepared to meditate, nibble on TicTacs and wait for the plane to land. But a visitor appeared beside him, a white-haired fellow who carried a National Geographic with chimps on the cover.

"Is it Dunkirk? I wondered," said the fellow, interrupting the Soupster's reverie.

"I beg your pardon?" said the Soupster.

"I was taking my early morning constitutional, and I saw the most curious thing – throngs of boats heading under the bridge. I've never seen so many boats heading out at one time!"

"It's the Salmon Derby," said the Soupster.

"A pinkish hat?" said the anthropologist incredulously.

"No, no," said the Soupster. "It's a big fishing contest that's held every year. Everybody from the luckiest fisherman to the most accursed, tries his or her luck to catch the biggest king salmon and net the biggest prize, which has been beaucoup cash. Plus, bragging rights."

"Ah, yes," said the anthropologist. "A spring fertility festival. The ritual rewarding of the most successful harvester to ensure everyone's enthusiasm for the long season ahead. I once worked with a group of people whose 'prize' was given for digging up the largest tapioca root."

"Who are you calling a tapioca root?" said a voice from the wall above the anthropologist, who turned in the direction of the sound.

The voice belonged to a 70+ lb. king salmon mounted on a plaque. His pointed face jutted out and lips moved like any number of audio-animatronic singing fish. The anthropologist, therefore, did not realize he was in the presence of an authentic airport poltergeist.

The Soupster, however, backed up a few steps and watched passively.

"Interactive," said the anthropologist, indicating the fish. "Very clever."

"I'm very attractive," said the salmon, peering down on the anthropologist's spreading Male Pattern Baldness. "Which is more than I can say for vous."

"You speak French?" said the anthropologist.

"I speak salmon," said the king salmon. "You call it what you want."

"You seem confident, firm in your role," the anthropologist told the king salmon. "Rooted."

"Well, I'm mounted to this plaque," the wisenheimer king salmon said. "But I wasn't always."

"Once, I roamed the North Pacific with packs of my friends, thousands of miles past under-sea wonders too numerous to utter. I've seen orcas cresting at sunset in Prince William Sound, great pods of stellar sea lions off Point Hope. I swam strong and free for seven long years," and here the fish chuckled, "until I met up with a crafty denizen of the surface. A sly fisherman and former school principal who knew just how to lure a seven-year old. We won the Salmon Derby together that year back in the last century. Well, the money is spent, I'm mounted up here and it's all a stale old fish story now."

"Any regrets?" asked the anthropologist.

"Well, if I hadn't been caught, I'd've had kids," said the salmon. "You know us salmon. We like to have 100 million of them each!"

Celebrate
Wild Food

We are proud to live in a community with bountiful and fresh wild game, fish, seafood, plants and berries.

Alaska's wild foods are leaner and more nutritious than similar store-bought options.

SITKA SOUP KID'S PAGE

presents Bear*

North America is home to 3 kinds of bear. Alaska has them all! They are Brown Bear (or Grizzly), Black Bear & Polar Bear. Southeast Alaska has black & brown bear.

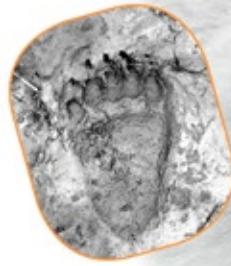

* How are bear like fish and sheep?

I don't know. How?

We are all irregular plural nouns. This means that we don't add an "s" or "es" to become plural. Our singular & plural names are the same, just like moose, bison, salmon & deer!

BROWN BEAR

Ursus arctos

BLACK BEAR

Ursus americanus

POLAR BEAR

Ursus maritimus

Some tips for keeping bear and ourselves
SAFE
here in bear country!

Make noise so you don't surprise a bear. Stay alert & look for bear signs (such as scat). Never approach the bear; respect their space. Keep food, garbage and other attractants out of reach. Stay calm.

Find all 14 of these famous bears!

There are 2 constellations named after bear:

Ursa Minor - the Little Dipper, and Ursa Major - the Big Dipper. Besides being on the Alaska flag, Ursa Major is the largest northern constellation and third largest in the sky.
