Our Town 7/4/19

The Soupster has a "bird" sighting

Originally published May 6, 2010

The Soupster awoke to the sound of birds – early birds. He heard a number of cars pull into the neighborhood. The engines stopped and car doors creaked open. Next came excited squawks and warbling calls, as the early birds recognized each other and descended on their destination.

"Lydia's Moving Sale!" The Soupster's eyes popped open and he leaped from his bed.

His beloved long-time neighbor was re-locating to Hawaii to be with her son Hank and his family, who had already remodeled their lanai into an apartment. A couple of years earlier, Lydia's daughter-in-law Jackie had come into an inheritance, so Hank had closed his not-so-successful Our Town nautical pest extermination business ("Swimming Rats Our Specialty"). Having misjudged their opportunities in the 49th State, Hank and Jackie had decided to give the 50th a whirl.

The Soupster quickly donned his clothes – grateful for the new 21st Century rule that men no longer needed to comb their hair – and hurried over to Lydia's.

His neighbor's modest home was overrun with early birds. But of course! For Lydia had had the temerity to put an ad in the previous evening's newspaper: "Aloha Moving Sale! Everything must go! Items free or you set the price. 9am-1pm. No early birds."

Nothing inflamed an early bird's lust for cheap but serviceable household items like those last three words. "No early birds?" he thought. "Really, Lydia?" He looked at his watch. It was just past 8:30.

At the front door, Lydia was negotiating with one of the early birds, who held a DVD player and a lamp. The early bird held cash, but Lydia pushed his hand back. "It's okay to take them for free," she insisted.

"I'm sure you could use the money," said the bird, placing a $50 bill in her hand and hurrying out the door.

"It's been like this," said Lydia, acknowledging the Soupster. "I tell them they can have the stuff for free. I must look pitiful or something, because they keep forcing me to take money."

"Why don't you want to take money?"

"I feel like I should pay them," said Lydia. "To take this stuff away. You know how much you accumulate in 30 years? I was going to take everything to the White Elephant, but do you know how many trips that would have made? This way the buyers come right to me. Cuts out the middleman."

Lydia turned her attention to a bird holding a sewing basket, a coffee maker and two tin buckets. More early birds arrived as the Soupster surveyed the scene. Lydia's household was being demolished peck by peck, as surely as ravens worrying a dead salmon.

But Lydia seemed happy, the Soupster surmised. "Hey Lydia, what are you going to spend all this unexpected money on?" he asked.

"Oh, it all goes to the White E.," said Lydia. "Do you know how much trouble this is saving me? By cutting out the middleman??"
