Our Town 10/24/19

The Soupster recounts his "weird" dream in great detail

It was the time of the year when we get tired of being inside, yet outside, rain was falling so hard that even the newest rain gear was daunted.

"Do you suppose the other hikers made an earlier start?" the Soupster said, knowing he and Lola were probably the only ones in the forest right then.

"Let's face it, we're hard core," Lola said, squinting through the droplets on her glasses.

The Soupster reached into his pocket and extracted a shiny red apple, bit into it and shook his head. "Disappointing," he mumbled. "Floury."

"Aah, expectations lead to resentment," Lola said wisely.

"All that glitters is not gold," the Soupster declared.

"How about, you can't judge a book by its cover?" Lola winked. "Say, I ran into Fran downtown yesterday. She tried to convince me to go on The Library Show on Our Town Radio. The problem is, I don't read much. Spend most of my time making stuff…or hiking in the rain."

"Well, you Google, don't you? "the Soupster asked. "What's even considered a 'book' these days? You can find anything you need to know online. Does it cease being a book when you can see the person who's delivering the info, like those YouTube videos? How do you think I know how to repair my washing machine, replace the rear window wiper motor in my car, and unclog the vent on the dishwasher?" the Soupster said.

"Okay Soupster, I get the picture," said Lola, laughing. "I do read self-help books, but the minute I go public to discuss them, everyone will know what's wrong with me."

"Or themselves," the Soupster said.

"True! Anyway, the best way to feel normal is to have weird friends," Lola declared. "That's why I like you so much, Soupster," she joked. "Speaking of which, have you been doing any dreaming lately?" she asked.

"Glad you asked, Lola. I had a fabulous dream just last night. I dreamed that I woke up, made my bed and went into the bathroom to comb my hair. When I returned, I found the covers turned down with my laptop lying open by the pillows. Figuring a pixie was messing with me, I found a deck of cards and laid them out to spell the word PIXIE and left the room again. I came back to find the cards reorganized to spell the word DAVID, which I assumed was the pixie's name. Then I saw him! Perched on the windowsill, he looked like Elf on the Shelf: About 18" tall, a red outfit and hat, ruddy complexion and round nose.

"He and I went to the grocery store where he gave me a bucket of gold, alarming the Scouts as I tipped it out on their bake-sale table." Just then, the Soupster paused to dig in his pocket for a handful of sunflower seeds. Tossing them into his mouth, he instantly spat them out again. "Eeeww! Raw lentils!" he exclaimed. "I must have topped up my trail mix from the wrong jar in the pantry."

"Or your elf friend is trying to change your teeth into gold… crowns," said Lola. "After all, it is that weird time of year!"

presents the

Pretzel

Q: If you eat too many salted pretzels on Halloween, what happens the next day?

A: November thirst!

Pretzels originated in Germany (then Bavaria). Hard pretzels were born in Pennsylvania which is the pretzel capital of the U.S.! Historically pretzels have been used in wedding ceremonies and hidden by children at Easter time!

A Pretzel Mustache!

Fresh baked pretzels hang in a German bakery.

In the 16th century, Austria granted pretzel bakers their own coat of arms!

Twist & turn your way through this pretzel!

A Cheesesteak stuffed pretzel!

Pretzel street vendor cart in Turkey.

The largest pretzel recorded weighed 1,728 lbs in 2015 in El Salvador. It measured 29' ft 3" long by 13' 3" wide.
