Our Town 11/5/2020

Originally Published November 7, 2013

(Ahead of his time) the Soupster hunkers down

The Soupster was not damp, but everything outside the walls of his house couldn't have been soggy. In Our Town "Fall" might better be called "Thrown At" because the rain and/or hail of the season seems propelled downward by a force greater than mere gravity.

The Soupster was feeling bored and lonely, so he was happy when Carla called from Minnesota. "Bored and a little lonely, but dry," the Soupster said when Carla asked how he was.

Carla chattered on about her kids Josh and Rebecca and husband Josh, and her going back to college online. Then, she said "Oops, I'm getting Call Waiting, must be Becca, I'm supposed to pick her up. Can you hold?"

The Soupster did. Switching to speaker phone, he wandered toward his back porch, where the part covered by a fiberglass roof played wonderful rhythms as it hailed. The sound rose and fell like the aural equivalent of those birds whose flocks turn on a dime: sheets of sound, rippling and turning.

Carla came back on, "Sorry, Soupster," she said. "That was Becca, who needs another half hour before I get her. So you're lonely and a little bored?"

"Actually, bored and a little lonely," said the Soupster. "This is a rough time of the year, weather-wise."

"Tell me about it," said Carla. "I'm an Our Town girl. Remember, you just have to make it to Thanksgiving. Then the holiday lights go up and you start talking to friends. And then it's New Years and you notice the light coming back a little more."

"Oh, I hate to do this," Carla blurted, "But I'm getting another call. Will you hold again?"

The Soupster did. The hail slacked off. A shaft of sunlight pierced the gray sky, came through the window, and fell upon a bookshelf, where there lived a ceramic planter in the shape of a fish with enormous crimson lips. Carla had given the Soupster the fish two decades earlier, after he helped her move. This was before kids and even before husband Josh.

Next to the fish was a half-scale raven carved out of wood. Steve Jessup had given the Soupster the raven after the Soupster took Steve's parents out on his boat. Next to that, an entire dog family stretched out on their papier-mâché couch – a gift from somebody. Above the dogs nestled signed copies of all the books by Our Town's writers over the years.

The Soupster touched the arms of his sweater – knitted by Giselle for his birthday. In the pantry were jars of sockeye and jams, all canned by various friends. If he wanted, he could gaze around his living room at the paintings and sculptures created by friends. Or he could pop in a CD cut by one of Our Town's bands.

Carla came back on the line. "I can see why you feel lonely," she said. "I keep abandoning you."

"You know, I don't feel lonely," said a satisfied Soupster, taking in his surroundings. "Not anymore."

The National Oceanographic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA) has kept careful track of extreme climate events over the past four decades. Damages thus far come to trillions of dollars; and they are growing. But these include only part of the picture, what is referred to as "market" damages – expenditures that show up in national income accounts as a result of hurricanes, heatwaves, wildfires, severe storms, floods, and droughts. Even more worrisome, though, are "non-market" impacts such as mortality and morbidity where assigning a dollar value is much more difficult and contentious. Also included in this category are losses in environmental quality and biodiversity and loss of ecosystems upon which our future prosperity depends." 435f8186bf4bbf0

Remain diligent & practice proper hygiene measures, such as washing your hands often, avoiding close contact with others and keeping your social circle small. Stay home if you feel ill, wear a face covering when around others, and clean & disinfect objects and surfaces on a regular basis.
