SITKA TELLS TALES

When I spoke recently with filmmaker and documentarian Ellen Frankenstein, she explained, "Normally we do Sitka Tells Tales live in a small space in Sitka." But in the Covid-19 environment, this local staple, like so many forms of art and social interaction, has had to adapt.

On Feb. 25th, people will get to experience Sitka Tells Tales through the venue of Raven Radio – either streaming the live performances or listening to them on KCAW 104.7 FM. The stories will also be archived on artchangeinc.org.

"Storytelling is all about listening – you relate, you're impacted," says Frankenstein. It seemed almost like a natural to have live storytelling transmitted via radio.

Each person's story session is limited to 6 minutes. "The process by which people decide how to tell their stories is super-collaborative," says Frankenstein, as is putting the event together. "Sitka Tells Tales has a history of collaborating with other community organizations and non-profits."

The storytelling format is flexible. "Some of the past stories have included poetry and even music."

"We want to draw in people who don't always get to 'go to the podium.' There are usually about five tellers, who work together on their stories before the public event and offer each other feedback. In the past, this pre-work has been by gathering together in a room, but this time is being done over Zoom." Not ideal, maybe, admits Frankenstein, but still workable.

Tellers and producer alike must have "a tolerance for uncertainty, because you never know what interesting and serendipitous changes might ring in at the final performance." These last-minute changes can produce results which are "unexpected and sometimes heartbreaking." She adds, "The stories are not read; they are shared."

Frankenstein believes listening to each other, laughing and sharing moments of heartbreak together, changes us. People truly are changed by the hearing of other people's stories.

In a Sitka Tells Tales some years ago, I heard the story of a Sitka woman whom I had known for many years, but I (as I told Ellen) I never felt I knew this woman so well as after I heard her story. It changed my understanding of her forever.

I asked how Frankenstein came up with the theme for each show – like "Foot in Mouth" for this one.

FOOT IN MOUTH

STORIES OF LIFE CHANGING, SPLIT
SECOND CHOICES AND GAFFES.

THURSDAY, FEB 25TH, 8-9PM

"Sometimes," she said, "a person will come to me with a story they want to tell, and I will build the theme around that. Other times, the theme comes out of conversations I have."

Frankenstein is excited about getting the word out and encouraging participation, "not just in Sitka, but in other places as well." She wants to work with storytellers from communities in Raven's broadcast range. "It would be good," she says, "for people in Sitka to hear stories from all around." The collaboration with Raven may prove a perfect opportunity, a kind of lemonade.

Frankenstein welcomes questions and suggestions for future themes and tellers. And she always welcomes volunteers to make it all happen!

has resurrected old footage of one of the most important events in Tlingit, Haida and Tsimshian cultures in modern times. The series includes performances by 16 dance groups. The first Celebration was meant to underscore the fact the cultures had survived for more than 10,000 years - a renaissance of Southeast Alaska Native culture that prompted people largely unfamiliar with their own heritage to learn their ancestral songs and dances and to make regalia for future Celebrations. Today, Celebration is one of the largest events in Alaska, drawing thousands of people to the four-day festival, including thousands of children. DID YOU KNOW

That the Sitka Mini-Quilt Auction has been going on for more than 20 years?

These Little Works of Art - ranging from 6 to 24 inches across - have been supporting Sitka students since 1999. In their essays about 'If I were to make a quilt, it would be about...' students often tell of their families and of sacrifices made for their schooling.

The cost for the class is $125.00 (including sales tax) for commercial fishermen and $175.00 (including sales tax) for all others. Interested mariners may register online at www.amsea.org or call (907) 747-3287. Instructor Jerry Dzugan, will cover cold-water survival skills; EPIRBs, signal flares, and mayday calls; man-overboard recovery; firefighting; flooding and damage control; dewatering pumps, immersion suits and PFDs, helicopter rescue, life rafts, abandon ship procedures, and emergency drills. AMSEA's Fishing Vessel Drill Conductor workshops meet the U.S. Coast Guard training requirements for drill conductors on commercial fishing vessels, 46 CFR 28.270 (c). This class is an excellent opportunity for commercial fishermen and other mariners to gain hands-on training with marine safety equipment and learn best practices for surviving emergencies at sea. Participants must bring their own cloth face mask and agree to follow class safety procedures to prevent the transmission of COVID-19. AMSEA is offering this class at a reduced cost to commercial fishermen thanks to support from the National Institute for Occupational Safety & Health, the U.S. Coast Guard, the Alaska

Department of Commerce, Community, and Economic Development, and AMSEA members., 797602fce41a204e

QUILTS & Quilting

Close up view of Crazy Quilt, 1885

Quilting is the process of joining layers of fabric together, either by hand or using a sewing machine. Oftentimes, the top layer of fabric is itself composed of many little "patches" or pieces of fabric sewn together to create a unique artistic design, sometimes called a "patchwork" - A nice, warm quilt is typically the result of the entire process!

Crazy quilts are Victorian-era patchwork quilts, without a design, and usually pieced together from irregularly shaped bits of fabric, often silk and velvet. They were a fad from the 1880s - 1920s and served to show off fancy needlework!

Quilting has traditionally been a social activity as well. As Sitka's Ocean Wave Quilters have found, this socializing can even be done, when necessary, on Zoom!
