Our Town August 29, 2013

The Soupster is called on by the teacher

Our Town retired school teacher Elsbeth Newhauser picked up her walking stick and dog leash and called her bulldog Gerta to her side. The two always left the house for their walk at the same time every morning and followed a route that took them down their residential street to an intersection with a four way stop. It was there that they would cross the main road before continuing on their journey.

This day, however, when they got to the intersection, Gerta abruptly sat down and refused to move. "Now, come on," Elsbeth encouraged, motioning forward. She had barely finished her sentence when she noticed a large dog charging across the street towards them. Elsbeth gasped and pulled Gerta out of the way, then watched in horror as a bicyclist raced down the hill and flew through the intersection, swerving from side to side. A speeding car followed close behind and slammed on its brakes, but failed to stop before careening into a utility pole.

When the action came to a halt, the bicyclist was laying on his side in the street. The woman in the car struggled to open her door, then emerged, waving her arms in the air. "Why did you stop in the middle of the street?" she yelled at the bicyclist, as he scooted out from under his twisted bike.

"I had to!" he shouted back. "It was all I could do to miss hitting that dog in front of me!"

As they argued, a frantic-looking young man ran up to the intersection, looked at the other two and asked, "Have you seen my dog? He's a large Lab." That was enough to spark an even bigger argument between the three about whose fault the accident was.

Finally, Elsbeth's teacher's instincts kicked in. She tapped her walking stick on the sidewalk and shouted, "People! Listen!" The bicyclist, motorist and dog owner immediately stopped talking and looked at her. "I don't know whose fault this was, but we're not leaving here until we figure it out!"

At that moment, the Soupster rushed out of a friend's house nearby, approached the group, and politely raised his hand. "Yes, Mr. Soupster," Elsbeth said, as if calling on one of her former students.

"Mrs. Newhauser, allow me to describe what I observed just now from the front window. The dog, which was off-leash and clearly in violation of city leash laws, came running down the sidewalk and dashed across the road in front of the bicyclist. The bicyclist had, just seconds before, failed to stop at the four-way stop as he sped down the hill. The motorist, who slowed down, but didn't fully stop at the intersection, was looking down at her cell phone as she passed me."

"Thank you, Mr. Soupster," Elsbeth said. "Well then, I hope you've all learned an important lesson about following the rules and being considerate of your fellow students….I mean…fellow citizens."

"Yes, Mrs. Newhauser," they responded all together.

Annual Park Photo Contest Opens for Submissions

Each visitor to Sitka National Historical Park, whether they've lived in Sitka all their lives or visited for just an afternoon, perceives the dynamic landscape and resources in a different way. The 2013 National Public Lands Day amateur photo contest and the resulting photo exhibit, Perspectives: Sitka National Historical Park, will illustrate these changes in scenery, and the slightly different lens through which each visitor views and experiences the park. To enter, e-mail or submit any photos relating to the following categories: Native Heritage: Any aspect of SE Native culture. Sitka NHP Wildlife: Alaskan wildlife in their natural habitat relevant to the park. Sitka NHP Scenery -- Southeast Alaska's beauty relevant to the park. Small Perspectives for children 13 years and younger. Take a picture of your favorite place, or activity in Southeast. Entries must be submitted with an entry form no later than 5pm Sun. Sept. 16 at the Visitor Center or e-mailed to nps_sitk_website_contact@nps.gov. Contestants may enter up to three submissions in Ad#24952

PANDAS

RIDING "PANDA BACK"

TINY NEWBORN PANDA

FLUTE OR DINNER?

The Giant Panda is a native of China • It is believed there are about 2,000 wild pandas in China •Though a panda is a bear, it does not hibernate in the winter, but is awake all year • Pandas eat mostly bamboo, although they also eat fruit and rodents • They have to eat 20 or more lbs. of bamboo every day • Panda cubs are born blind and helpless • Newborns weigh less than half a pound • By the time they are 7 months old, baby pandas can climb trees by themselves! An adult panda may weigh 200 lbs. or more.
